Kentucky Lawmakers Cut Unemployment Benefits

Last month, Kentucky lawmakers passed HB 4, which will cut unemployment benefits from 26 weeks to 12 weeks for most of the state's workers and 16 weeks for workers in construction.

The bill was vetoed by Governor Andy Beshear, but the legislature overrode the veto and passed the bill despite the opposition from their state's top executive.

Earlier this year, a similar proposal (SB 2) ran in the West Virginia legislature.

After passing the full Senate and the House Finance Committee, it never received a vote of the full House of Delegates as time ran out and the bill did not become law.

However, this type of legislation is expected to return in future legislative sessions, as the push to cut unemployment benefits by national anti-worker organizations gets stronger and continues to hit red states across the country.

The Kentucky Center for Economic Policy said the passage of this type of legislation in the state will push many Kentuckians into lower paying jobs and even poverty in some cases. This is partly due to the way the duration of benefits is calculated.

Similar to the proposal offered in West Virginia earlier this year, the bill uses the statewide unemployment rate to determine the length of time benefits can be paid to a beneficiary. For instance, at 4.5% statewide unemployment, beneficiaries would be paid benefits for 12 weeks.

However, if the unemployment rate increases to 5%, then beneficiaries would receive unemployment compensation for 13 weeks.

However, the statewide unemployment rate tends to be much lower than other, more rural areas in other parts of the state.

In recent years, Magoffin County, Cont. on p. 3>>

Members of UA Local 625 and the Charleston Building Trades meet with Guy Ward (R-Marion) about the WV proposal to cut unemployment benefits. With the help of Delegate Ward, who was opposed to the bill, WWSBT members were able to stop it from becoming law in West Virginia, but a similar proposal recently passed in Kentucky.

Details Surrounding Federal Infrastructure Funds from Bi-Partisan Bill Still Pending

It has been almost five months since the bi-partisan federal infrastructure bill was signed into law and questions are still swirling around when and how the funds will be deployed in our state.

Over $6 billion in funding is coming to West Virginia for roads, bridges, water and sewer, mine reclamation, broadband, and other areas of infrastructure. However critical guidance documents have, for the most part, not been completed leaving many waiting for important details.

WVSBT Meets with WV Reps on Capitol Hill

Representatives from the West Virginia State Building and Construction Trades meet with Senator Joe Manchin at his office in DC during a trip to the North American Building Trades Union (NABTU) 2022 Legislative Conference.

WVSBT representatives also met with Senator Shelley Moore Capito and Congressman David McKinley to thank them for their votes on the bi-partisan infrastructure bill and to get answers regarding the details of how the much-needed funds will be dispersed within our state.

The conference included various practical workshops aimed at addressing different policy areas including multiemployer pension and health issues, recruiting veterans and women to the trades, implementing apprenticeship readiness programs, federal legislative affairs, and others.

Infrastructure Funds

While the $3.7 billion of roads and bridges funding will be deployed through the WV Department of Transportation, there are still many unanswered questions as to how the other areas of funding will be distributed and when they will be available.

For example DEP will oversee more than $145 million per year for 15 years directed at mine reclamation, significantly more than is currently being spent. Currently projects are in the $500,000 range but it is hard to see how the new funding can be effectively spent with projects of that small a scope. A similar issue is found with gas well plugging funds.

In addition to the guaranteed funding, there are billions in “discretionary funding” made available, which will allow states to compete for grants in many categories including mega projects, additional road and bridge funding, flood mitigation, electric vehicle charging infrastructure, and more.

How local communities can apply for these funds, and the criteria with which they will be judged is still to be written.

Recently, representatives from the WV Building and Construction Trades visited DC to speak with West Virginia’s representatives about these issues directly on Capitol Hill.

“There is a lot of interest in apprenticeship, and rightfully so,” said John Epperly, Secretary-Treasurer of the WV State Building Trades. “So any state or local government applications for additional infrastructure funds better include something about apprenticeship and pre-apprenticeship. And we heard there will be language to encourage local hiring and project labor agreements as part of the criteria to judge each grant application.”

Each agency overseeing the funds is expected to have the details published by June so states and local communities can start the process of applying for funds.

“We are encouraging state and federal lawmakers to work together to ensure this funding will be distributed effectively,” said Epperly.

“We have a great opportunity. However, it is an opportunity that could be lost if the funds aren’t deployed, and our state is required to send them back.” ■

State COPE

WV AFL-CIO Meets in Charleston to Make Endorsements for 2022 Primary Election

On March 19, the WV AFL-CIO met in Charleston, West Virginia to confirm statehouse candidate endorsements for the 2022 WV Primary Election, set for May 10.

Delegates to the state Committee On Political Education (COPE) brought their recommendations from the local Central Labor Councils (CLCs) around the state to submit them for a vote of the entire body before being officially endorsed by the WV AFL-CIO.

The state COPE is made up of 75 delegates from across the state, and candidates had to receive at least a 2/3rds majority vote to receive an endorsement.

"We work closely with the WV AFL-CIO and typically agree on most endorsements.

"However, certain candidates weren't originally recommended for an endorsement that we felt should be on that list," said Chuck Parker, President of the WV State Building and Construction Trades.

"When that happened, our members stood up and voiced our opinions to make sure they got labor's support."

For the first time ever, candidates from all 100 newly formed House of Delegates districts were considered for an endorsement.

All candidates who are running for office had the opportunity to fill out a WV AFL-CIO questionnaire.

If they did so, the candidate was invited to have an interview with their local CLC, which helped CLC members to get a better idea of who the candidate was as a person before recommending an endorsement of their campaign.

The CLC interviews covered isues that are important to the labor movement such as local hiring, prevailing wage, the repeal of right-to-work, unemployment, apprenticeship programs, safety regulations, licensing, and issues for other unions as well.

The CLC then made its recommendations based on the questionnaires and interviews and brought them to the state COPE for a vote.

The WV AFL-CIO state COPE committee will reconvene again during the month of June in Charleston, WV to confirm endorsements for the 2022 general election. ■ a rural county in eastern Kentucky, has had an unemployment rate upwards of 30% at times, while the statewide rate has averaged around 6%.

KY Unemployment

"While unemployment is low in the western end of our state, it is very high in the eastern end. Kentucky is not a one size fits all state, but this bill is a one size fits all bill," said Chad Mills, Director of the Kentucky State Building and Construction Trades. "The law will affect our members when there is a downturn in the economy.

"As we all know, construction workers are often the first to feel a downturn in the economy and the last to reap the rewards of an uptick in the economy." ■
